Carolina Salguero worked as a photojournalist from the fall of the Berlin Wall through 9/11 in NYC with revolutions, historic events, documentaries and portraits in between. Her clients included National Geographic, Life, The New York Times; and major publications in Europe and Japan. She won awards, and her work is in the collections of several museums and universities.

She founded the award-winning nonprofit PortSide NewYork, based in Red Hook on the historic oil tanker MARY A. WHALEN from where these photos are made.

After hurricane Sandy, PortSide ran an aid station and helped many people. PortSide has worked for the 10 1/2 years since Sandy to help Red Hook be more resilient.

Now, PortSide seeks help with their own Sandy recovery project. Sales of Salguero's photos supports that work, a project to restore the ship and help #makeMARYrunagain. bit.ly/makeMARYrunagain

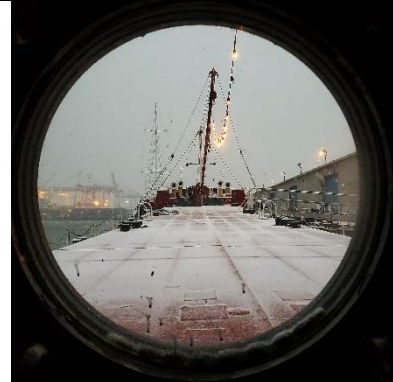

Digital archival prints will be made to order by SpectraflowEast.com. They printed all the unframed Salguero photos.
